I asked you for details of the intimidation and you just repeated the charge with the same generality. So why should I take you seriously?

As far as treating you with respect, Michelle, I am paying you respect by calling to your attention the difference between a sincere interaction and a court set-up piece. From your response, I can tell that you are sentient to that distinction.

Randy,
The letter to which I believe you are referring dealt with, among other things, your clients' intimidation of witnesses. I cannot image how you would consider such a serious topic to be a waste of your time, much less mine. We take this matter very seriously and will not hesitate to escalate it to the court, if it continues. And yes, my letter was written with the expectation that the court may at some point need to see its contents. Regardless of the topic, however, I always treat opposing counsel with respect, whether deserved or not. I would expect the same from you in the future.

Michelle

Michelle, I received a letter from you responding to mine. I forget the date because I placed it so quickly in the round file. In the future, please don't waste your time or mine writing to me with another audience in mind.
